

EXAMPLE: Preservation Training project

Priority Urgency	High / Medium / Low High / Medium / Low
Background	Techniques for the care and preservation of taonga can be easily communicated and enable individuals, whānau, and hapū to look after their own taonga more effectively. The training will also support participants to appreciate the value of documents, photographs and objects from the past.
Description	Agencies such as the National Preservation Office of the National Library and National Services Te Paerangi, operating from Te Papa, offer a range of informal marae-based workshops and training in heritage-related areas, particularly conservation and preservation of taonga, documents and photographs. Participation in such workshops would raise the level of awareness of the importance of heritage among individual participants and hence within the community as a whole. Heritage New Zealand Pouhere Taonga and, to a lesser extent, Museums Aotearoa can offer similar services. ServiceIQ, the industry training organisation (ITO) for the museum, tourism and service sector, offers a range of professional training programmes - http://www.serviceiq.org.nz
Impact	Objectives: Better care of whanau, hapū and the community's heritage resources Benefits: Taonga are preserved for the future. Whānau and hapū learn new skills and may wish to participate in further education and training to contribute to wider iwi cultural heritage conservation activities. Risks:
Relationships	Relates to all aspects of cultural heritage – at whānau, hapū and iwi levels
Staging	Can be undertaken at any time.
Implementation	Any individual or group – could include representatives from all marae in the rohe
Issues
Key agencies & participants	Agency: National Preservation Office, National Library; Te Papa National Services Te Paerangi; Heritage New Zealand Pouhere Taonga; Museums Aotearoa, ServiceIQ, Personnel: Staff of above institutions will lead the workshop and the training with hapū and iwi representatives. Duration: 1-2 days Other: To be held at XX marae